

No danger of "Baby's" being overlooked; the dealers in toys and fancy goods are taking care of him at a furious rate these last days of Christmas shopping. But how about the "old man" and the larger boys?

Let us suggest:

$15 or $20 will buy a fine overcoat for a man, if selected from our reduced lots.

$5 will buy an overcoat or at exceptionally low prices. knickerbocker suit for a small boy-nice one, if you'll look among the "bargains" in either of our stores.

A Canadian toboggan suit for man or boy would be a brilliant gift; $8 to $12. Tobog' overcoats for children, $5.

House coats, wrappers, flannel robes and gowns, all "so English" and so comfortable as well as bright and prettyprices, $7 to $20. Dressinggowns for boys, too.

SOLD HIS BODY FOR DRINK.

Strange Story of the Headless Body of Shiftless Old Man.

While the freight men at Victor Station, a little south of Palmyra, N. Y., were handling a barrel yesterday morning addressed to "John G. Hawks, No. 305 West Twentyninth street, New York," the head was knocked off. The men were amazed to find the nude body of an old man.

The body was headless. It was the body of an old, shiftless fellow, Harrison Stamper, who was a drunkard and a public charge for years. The old boy had sold his body to a years. The old boy had sold his body to a young doctor of the neighborhood, James M. Marshall, for two gallons of whiskey. Marshall cut the head off and shipped the decapitated body to the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York.

A World reporter called at S05 West Twenty ninth street to-day. No Mr. Hawks lived there, and no doctor or medical student lodged in the house said that on last Monday a man about thirty years old engaged a room, saying that he did not intend to occupy it often, but wished to have a place to keep his instruments and where things could be sent.

He was a well-dressed, suave fyoung man. He said that he was a nurse. He gave no name or address. He has not been heard from since.

name or address. He has not been heard from since.

"As he left no deposit, the room is not really his," said the landlady, "and if any of his old boxes with corpses in them come here they can wait on the sidewalk. That is a nice sort of Christmas box."

At the College of Physicians and Surgeons no box of the kind had been received. The nearest approach to the name on the list of students was James Marshall Hawks, who knew nothing about the body.

"One of my students would hardly do such a thing," said the clerk, E. T. Brag, "since he knows the penalty for such an act. Our bodies are received from the Commissioners of Charity and Correction, and although we do not get enough, such a course as that would not be followed."

If James G. Hawks really is waiting for the old man without a head, who shuffled off his fnortal coil with the merry aid of two gallons of whiskey, he probably will call for his Christmas box at the station, as 805 West Twenty-ninth street knows him not.

Ex-Judge A. J. Dittenhoefer, accompanied by Miss Belina Dolaro, the actrees, stepped into the Cours of Common Pleas to-day to defend the suit brought against Miss Dolaro and Henry E. Abbey by William Yardisy, who claims to be part author of the play called "The Fashion," in which Miss Dolaro is to appear at Wallack's.

Yardisy seeks an injunction to restrain the production of the play unless his name is mentioned as co-lutine with Belina Dolaro. Neither side was quite prepared to proceed, and an adjournment that it next Tracky was granted. Miss Dolaro was Composited because the matter was not satisfy.

YOUNG M'NEALLY NABBED.

He was Found and Arrested at Halifax Early this Morning.

(SPECIAL TO THE WORLD.) HALIPAX, N. S., Dec. 23.-Frank C. Mc-Neally, the Saco Bank robber, is arrested. He had just finished his breakfast and had returned to his room in the Hotel Halifa: when Detective Power, of this city, rushed in and had him under arrest in a twinkling. The arrest was precipitated by the arrival of the Boston Globe correspondent here last night. As soon as the Globe reporter arrived he was the object of strictest surveillance, and the English detectives, who have been watching McNeally for several days, fearing that the bird might have flown or be captured by an American, at once pounced upon him and ran him to the City Marshal's office in double-

McNeally shook like an aspen as he went from the hotel. There is no doubt about McNeally's identity.

The American Consul at Halifax has in-formed Mr. McGrath, the Globe's correspon-dent, that he is entitled to the $7,000 reward. Young Frank McNeally was a clerk in the Saco National Bank at Saco, Me. Last evening Mias Ray Reuben, a pretty girl nineteen years old, who is also employed in Greenberger's hat factory as forewoman over the trimmers, called on Policeman Gallagher, who was on duty in Broome street, to arrest Morris for continually annoying her and for declaring his love for her.

Greenberger was arraigned at the Tombs Court this morning. Mias Reuben told Justice Kilbreth that she could not explain why he bothered her so. The defendant when asked why he annoyed the complainant said: "I love this girl. I will win her yet, I swear she shall be my bride." Greenberger was committed for examination as to his mental condition.

No News Yet Received from the Derelict Timber Raft.

Shipping men, merchants and people who have friends on the ocean examined THE WORLD carefully this morning to learn if the great raft of timber, which was abandoned by the steamship Miranda some two hundred miles southeast of New York last Saturday, was still adrift. News is anxiously awaited from the big tugboat C. W. Morse, which set out from the foot of Sixth street, Williamsburg, yesterday in search of it. The raft is built of immense logs of spruce the centre or anchor log being a tree seventyfive feet long, with a thickness of three and one-half feet at the base and ten inches at the top, and there is not a piece of timber in the raft less than twenty-five feet long. Fifty-four tons of chains were used in lashing the timbers together, and the launching of the raft in the Bay of Fundy, Nova Scotia, Nov. 15, was heralded as the first move in a revolution of the method of lumber-shipping from the Canadian timber regions to this and neighboring ports.

The raft is composed of 30,000 pieces of timber, or enough to make cargoes for 100 yessels of 100 tons each. It is longer than vessels of 100 tons each. It is longer than the largest ocean steamer, draws more water, and is of about equal width.

It took six months to build it. The process of making the raft is patented by H. R. Robertson. The raft is worth $150,000 and is owned by James D. Leary, the ship-builder and lumberman. It was to have been brought up the Sound and anchored in Flushing Bay. It was floated safely down the coast of Maine for about two hundred miles and there met by the steamship Miranda, which was to tow the monster the rest of the way. But in the gale of Saturday the big hawsers broke and the raft was abandoned.

the gale of Saturday the big hawsers broke and the raft was abandoned.

To cast a six-foot log into New York Bay is a misdemeanor, but it is no logal offense to abandon a big raft at sea.

The mass of lumber would not ordinarily drift further than a mile an hour. Should a steamer strike it the result would be terrible.

All the shipping and steamship companies having offices in New York have cabled to their European offices giving warning of the vagabond raft, but there are many vessels nearing this shore with precious freight to whose commanders the drifting timber pile is unknown, and much worry is consequent upon this fact.

How much concern is felt by shippers may be judged by the fact that the revenue cutter Grant and the war steamer Enterprise have joined with the powerful Morse in searching the ocean wilderness for the derelict mass of timber.

There are scores of visitors at the Ship News Office and the offices of Supt. Houghton, of the Maritime Exchange, and Lieut. Cottman, of the Hydrographic Office, anxiously inquiring for news of the floating reef.

The Morse is 165 feet long, $1 feet beam and 17 feet deep—the largest and strongest tug on the Atlantic coast. Should she run across the dangerous derelict she will at-tempt to tow it into port with a thirteen-inch wire hawser. No ordinary vessel could begin to handle the bundle of timber in anything but the fairest, stillest weather, and that is not the sort of weather to be looked for for not the sort of weather to be looked for for some days.

The present or approximate whereabouts of the raft is unknown, though the opinion prevails that it cannot have drifted very far from the place where she was last seen.

The winds have been from a generally westerly direction since Saturday last, with but little variation. The raft may have been blown out into the Gulf Stream, and if that is so the timber is now on its way to Iceland. More probably, however, and here lies the cause of the anxiety among shippers, the mass is still drifting in the pathway followed by the transatlantic steamers, and near enough to these shores to be dangerous also to coastwise craft.

Thomas L. Cavin, a truckman, while backing his horse and wagon to the bank of Gowanus Camil, at the foot of Douglass street, backed into the canal. Cavin was fished out, but his horse, which was valued at $250, was drowned.

James Gannon and Michael Lawrence, the young men who were arrested on Dec. 16 on suspicion of being implicated in a burglary en E. J. Frayne's liquor-saloon in Hamilton avenue, were honorably discharged yesterday by Justice Massey, ho evidence having been produced to show that they were in any way concerned in the affair.

William P. Daniels was arrested last evening on complaint of Henry Winter, who accuses him of being implicated with Frederick Stubenwall in passing worthess checks upon him on Dec. 14 to the amount of $24.

WHY SCHOOLBOYS WILL YELL.

Hollday from This Afternoon Till the Wednesday After New Year's. When the good little boy gets home this afternoon he will put his school-books carefully away. The average boy is likely to ar-fully away. The average boy is likely to arrive a little later and to throw his books into the most convenient corner with a hop, skip and jump, supplemented with a more or less subdued yell.

This he will do because his school duties will be over until Wednesday morning after New Year's at 9 o'clock, and because his spirits are rapidly shooting up towards the holiday mark.

He thought that he would have to return to school Tuesday, but the action of the School Commissioners in giving "Ladies" Day " allows him an opportunity to put another year's fun in one day.

The closing exercises in a number of the schools will be followed by little feasts given to the children by the teachers.

When the holidays are over the children, who will be supposed to be rested by the brief yeacation, will be prepared for their examinations.

Supt, Mason, of the United States Assay Office, in Wall street, said to-day that the morning paper in Wall street, said to-day that the morning papers had made several misstatements in regard to the deposit of Spanish doubloons which had recently been made there. The actual number of come was 5,000 and their aggregate vaine, at $15,00 apiece, was $101,400.

They were deposited there several days ago by Moses Taylor & Co., Wall street merchants, who received them in the way of balances in their Havans trade. It was shown from their appearance that few of the coins had ever been in general circulation. Workmen were engaged in melting them up into bullion at the Assay Office this morning.
